Fold here Re-imagining global governance Global governance brings together diverse actors to coordinate collective action at the level of the planet. The goal of global governance, roughly defined, is to provide global public goods, particularly peace and security, justice and mediation systems for conflict, functioning markets and unified standards for trade and investment. The leading institution in charge of global governance today is the United Nations. The UN does not directly bring together the people of the world, but sovereign nation states, and currently counts 193 members who make recommendations through the UN General Assembly.	Climate and ecological crisis Human activities, such as the burning of fossil fuels, are causing the world's temperature to increase. Rising global temperatures are affecting our climate and weather patterns in some ways that are irreversible. As a result of pollution, climate change, destruction of natural habitats and exploitation, one million species of plants and animals are now threatened with extinction. Climate change and the loss of biodiversity threaten food and water security and human health.	Principles of Justice, Equity & Fairness Equity means that while acknowledging that tackling climate change is a common problem for all countries and hence every country needs to take actions, some countries (the richer countries) have contributed more to the problem than others as they have been the main beneficiaries of emissions for the last two centuries. Justice is about the adverse impacts of climate change on poor people and communities there are many more people affected by the emissions of richer people and countries. In this context, it is the poorest and most vulnerable developing countries that are most affected by climate change. These countries are also the least responsible for climate change. Fairness is a principle that underlies the way in which communities perceive the distribution of costs and benefits. Fairness can be very subjective in its application.	Principle of Effectiveness Effectiveness is the ability to produce desired output. Effectiveness in respect to climate change mitigation can be assessed by evaluating the impact of climate policies. Although the direct and indirect effects on climate change are the prime concern when proposing and implementing policies, various policy instruments have various effects in other domains, most of which concern citizens and their day to day lives.
